

Only 14%

of Singapore workers feel engaged at work*

That's among the lowest globally.

This isn't just a people problem. It's a business one.

According to the Singapore Workforce Report (2026), Singapore trails both global and regional peers

Low engagement is often a signal of something deeper:

- ✗ No clear growth opportunities
- ✗ Uncertain about how their roles will evolve
- ✗ Not confident they have the skills to keep pace with change

TRUTH

7

Employees don't fear AI. They fear being left behind.

Uncertainty often leads to resistance.

Help employees embrace change by showing them:

- ✓ Why transformation is happening
- ✓ How their roles will evolve
- ✓ What skills they'll need next

Job redesign and skills training help employees adapt to evolving roles with greater confidence.

2

Managers need to be equipped to lead through change

When employees don't understand how AI will affect their roles, uncertainty can quickly become resistance.

Great managers:

- ✓ Give clear direction
- ✓ Recognise good work
- ✓ Coach consistently

With the right training and skills development initiatives, organisations can empower managers to better support their teams through the changing landscape.

3

Employee engagement starts with clarity

Employees are more likely to stay engaged when they understand:

- What is changing
- Why it matters
- How they can grow with the organisation

That means providing:

- ✓ Clear communication about transformation
 - ✓ Opportunities to build new skills
 - ✓ Visible pathways for career growth

This helps cultivate a workplace where people feel genuinely valued, invested in, and motivated to contribute.

In a world of constant change, engagement is precisely what determines whether a workforce adapts or resists.

Employers, you don't have to navigate the transformation alone.

e2i partners companies to help strengthen workforce resilience through:

- ✓ Workforce transformation
- ✓ Job redesign
- ✓ Skills development

Helping businesses build a more engaged, adaptable and future-ready workforce.
